

How to submit an article for The Journal of East Tennessee History

The Journal of East Tennessee History welcomes manuscripts and edited documents on the history of East Tennessee but also that of the state of Tennessee, the Southern Appalachians, and the South in general.

Research articles should be between 20 and 30 pages of double-spaced text, have solid grounding in primary and secondary sources, include full citations according to the Chicago Manual of Style, and address the subject's place within the existing historical scholarship and context. The editor will subject relevant and well-written articles to a double blind peer-review process before making a decision about publication. All manuscripts, edited documents, correspondence from potential book reviewers and publishers, and any other queries related to The Journal of East Tennessee History should be directed to:
